Ray's practice focuses on complex patent, copyright, trademark, and trade secret misappropriation litigation. In addition, he has experience in intellectual property related contract disputes having worked on a case as a first year intern at Maschoff Brennan from the summary judgment stage to attending and participating in mediation meetings.

While earning an undergraduate degree in computer science, Ray assisted professors in teaching multiple computer science courses. This experience helped Ray develop an ability to explain difficult and complex technical concepts to people with little to no technical background. In the summer after graduating and immediately prior to beginning law school, Ray took and passed the patent bar, preparing himself for a career in Intellectual Property law.

Outside of the office, Ray enjoys playing football, basketball, and most recently, pickleball.
