Taylor's practice focuses primarily on litigation matters, including domestic and international patent and trademark litigation and enforcement.

Prior to law school, Taylor studied Russian culture and language at Brigham Young University. He also lived in Russia and Belarus for two years, where he conducted volunteer work. During law school, he was a contributing editor for the Iowa Law Review. Taylor was also a Dean's Award recipient for Trademark and Unfair Competition Law. During his second and third years of law school, Taylor worked in the University of Iowa College of Law Legal Clinic in the criminal defense and immigration law practice groups, successfully representing indigent clients. Before joining Maschoff Brennan, Taylor was an associate at an IP law firm in Irvine, California, where he worked on various IP litigation matters and judgment enforcement.
